

M'GLYNN CASE HURT LAND LEAGUE HURT PRESTIGE OF CHURCH

Activities of Cardinal Gibbons and Archbishops Ireland and Keane Left New York in Second Place —Farley's Good Works

Catholic Church History in New York. Written Especially for The Evening World BY REV. J. TALBOT SMITH.

ARDINAL M'GLOTHY died in 1885, and by the year 1890 the Diocese of New York held only a secondary place in the public interest and in real importance. This was brought about partly by accident and partly by design, although no one thought it possible to reduce the great diocese a degree lower than its fine setting, the metropolis itself. Archbishop Gibbons, of Baltimore, had come into notice, not merely by his position as Primate, but through his clever book, "The Faith of Our Fathers," his skillful direction of the Third Plenary Council of Baltimore in 1883 and finally his elevation to the College of Cardinals in 1886. There is no abler public man in high position, either of Church or State, than Cardinal Gibbons. It may be difficult to define and describe his ability, but the experienced know its extent and quality. Out in St. Paul Archbishop Ireland divided with him the public esteem. Dr. Ireland is another Hughes, and has accustomed Americans to that kind of prelate. Dr. Hughes was a novelty and a wonder in his time, because of his boldness and rarity. Archbishop Ireland is as great a man and gets more credit for it.

In 1889 the Catholic University was opened in Washington, and its first president was Archbishop Keane, of Dubuque.

These three men took away from New York its prestige, innocently of course, by their ability in public affairs. They made it clear that Catholic brains existed elsewhere no less than in Manhattan.

Moreover, various kinds of trouble settled in the diocese of New York under the administration of Archbishop Corrigan. The case of Dr. McGlynn caused a long controversy and became a source of endless embarrassment. It is unnecessary to discuss its details here, except in outline.

Crouble Over Dr. McGlynn. Dr. Edward McGlynn was the pastor of St. Stephen's Church, on East Twenty-eighth street, and became famous as a public speaker. His speeches in behalf of the Land League gave great offense to the English Government, and also to Cardinal Simeoni, of the Roman Propaganda, who was Archbishop of New York at the time. Dr. McGlynn was expelled from the platform. With this request His Eminence of New York did not literally comply but he moderated the utterances of the orator. After the Cardinal's death the task of suppressing the oratorical flights of Dr. McGlynn fell to Archbishop Corrigan. Mr. George was the independent candidate and had the labor vote, and the influence of Dr. McGlynn was large enough to help him considerably. The Democratic leaders protested bitterly against the appearance of the priest on the political platform. Moreover, his utterances at various times had made him suspected of many bishops, who protested against him in Rome. Thus the English Government, Propaganda in Rome, the Labor party in New York, the George movement, Tammany Hall and a section of the episcopate were interested in the suppression or the promotion of Dr. McGlynn.

Archbishop Corrigan suspends him. Archbishop Corrigan forbade him to appear in the George campaign, and then suspended him for disobedience. Later he was deprived of his parish without examination or trial, and took to the public platform to explain his position and to denounce his persecutors. The case filled the journals of the world for seven years, up to 1894, when it was settled forcibly by the intervention of the Pope, acting through his legate, Archbishop Satolli. Dr. McGlynn was restored to his functions and made pastor of Newburg, where he died in 1900.

It would take a volume to describe the ramifications of this affair, whose most striking effect was to lower the prestige of the New York diocese, not only in the country, but before the non-Catholic citizens of Manhattan. It evoked all sorts of feeling, and naturally the more violent reached the public ear. Moreover, the more important prelates of the country felt that, since the New York authorities could not manage the trouble and put an end to it by some arrangement, the good of the Church required their intervention. The Archbishops of Baltimore, New York and New Orleans were strained for a long time.

When the Pope sent his legate, Archbishop Satolli, to settle the domestic quarrel and added fuel to the flames by columns of interviews, descriptions of his mission, so that Archbishop Satolli disappeared at one time of ever getting to the end of the turmoil.

Diocese Lost Prestige. When it was all over, and peace had been arrived, most people wondered

Spring Halt in Theatricals on Broadway.

THE theatrical season will develop a decided case of spring halt next week. There will not be a single new production along Broadway. On Monday night "The Warres of Virginia" will be the last of the season at the Metropolitan Theatre, where Mr. Wardfield ends his season's work to-night. In place of the Wednesday matinee at Weber's Music Hall there will be a professional matinee on Tuesday afternoon. Miss Olga Netherole will appear at the Metropolitan Theatre in the following repertoire: Monday, Friday and Saturday evenings, "Sapho"; Tuesday and Wednesday evenings and Saturday matinee, "Carmen"; Thursday evening, "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray." Miss Edna May Spencer and the stock company will continue to play "The Love Waltz" at the Lincoln Square Theatre. Adelaide Keim will begin her spring season at the Metropolitan Theatre on Monday afternoon in Clyde Fitch's play, "Barbara Frenchie." "The Love Waltz" will be seen in "The Love and the Prince." "Kate Barton's Temptation" will be the last of the season at the Lincoln Square Theatre. "The Cowboy and the Squaw" will be at the Thalia. "The Great New York Stars" come to the Metropolitan Theatre on Monday and Tuesday nights. "The Great New York Stars" will be at the Thalia. "The Great New York Stars" will be at the Thalia. "The Great New York Stars" will be at the Thalia.

Archbishop Farley.

His successor, Archbishop Farley, is well known to New Yorkers and the public since 1893, when he has been in the diocese. He became secretary to Cardinal McGlothy, and then to Cardinal Simeoni, of the Roman Propaganda. He was then made Vicar-General, Auxiliary Bishop and trustee of the Catholic University. He acquired the reputation of being the progress of a public man to the church. He has addressed himself to the task of restoring to the diocese what it lost in rank and influence through the case of McGlynn, and has undertaken various enterprises which may yet restore the old prestige. He has added to the number and efficiency of the church schools, opened a college for the training of young clerics, completed the apostle of the diocese, raised the standard of clerical training, enforced a stricter discipline among the clergy, introduced the Gregorian chant to the divine service, reorganized the Society for the Propagation of the Faith for this diocese and in numerous other ways has endeavored to bring the diocese back to the position of prominence which it held in the Catholic world before the McGlynn case.

Italian Grand Opera at The American Theatre.

YAN ABRAMSON'S Italian Grand Opera Company, which recently sang for a week at the Academy of Music after a successful tour in Chicago, begins a spring season at the American Theatre on Monday night. The company has been strengthened, and Mr. Abramson hopes that public support will enable him to extend the period of four weeks for which he booked. The prices are popular. At the

LOTSELLERS TO COMPETE WITH STOCK EXCHANGE

Auctioneers Plan to Hold Continuous Market for Outside Land.

New Yorkers will be able to trade in lots this year almost like they trade on the Stock and Grain Exchange. Auctioneers are planning to create an open public market for lots in the suburbs. They say that small investors want lots instead of stocks or bonds or savings bank books. To satisfy the demand, there will be almost a continuous series of bid auction offerings. More than 50,000 lots will be sold at auction in the New York suburbs this spring, summer and fall. This volume will break all records. As the average price of each lot will be at least $100, the total which the auctioneers expect to realize will reach $5,000,000. According to precedent, buyers of the 50,000 lots will number over 10,000. The average purchase of each will reach $133. Most of the property to be offered will be in sections which have been opened for home building by new rapid transit lines, or are to be opened soon. The public has been educated in the love of investments during the past year. Buyers do not want useless property. They want to make land their savings bank. They have ready cash to pay for it. Their buying promises to be highly stimulating because it means a steady inflow of real money.

Day to Start the Campaign.

From careful estimates of the land to be offered at auction, it is probable that Long Island will supply 20,000 lots, New Jersey 15,000, the Bronx and Westchester 10,000, Staten Island 5,000. All the active auctioneers in these sections are figuring on big sales. Many say that the new small buyers may be able to maintain a permanent open market in each section, like a stock exchange. If buyers want to offer their lots within a short time at higher prices the auctioneers are willing to arrange a series of regular sales for that purpose.

O. L. SCHWENCKE, JR., DRAWS SITTLES TO LONG ISLAND.

Several offerings of suburban lots started the season during the past week, but the real opening of the auction campaign will be next Tuesday, when Joseph P. Day will offer 245 Bronx lots on the Joel Wolfe estate tract. The same auctioneer will offer three other big Bronx tracts this month. His May offerings of Bronx lots will be offered in three lots on the Lohmeier Park tract, and on May 26 and 27 by 90 lots of the Benjamin I. H. Frank estate. The Hunts Point lots are a few blocks from the Harlem street station of the New York Central, and are situated on a suburban system, which is intended to connect with the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad at the Harlem station. Some of the lots front on the Bronx River. The Lohmeier Park tract is one of the best of the Country Club overlooking Pelham Bay. The lots are in the midst of old family estates of a high class. The Frank lots are near the Morris High School, next to the station of the New Haven Railroad, and are situated on a suburban system at Westchester Avenue and Classon Point road. In the neighborhood a large settlement of active two-family houses. All the lots are in the class wanted by small investors.

Official Announcement That Patrons Will Get Money in Full.

The National Bank of North America, prior to the October panic widely known as the headquarters of the chain of Charles W. Morse's banks, will pay off its depositors in full. The Evening World was authorized to-day to make this announcement to the public by a high representative of the United States Government, which has the institution under its control. It was added that there was $1,000,000 over and above the $1,000,000 needed to pay depositors, which would go to the stockholders when the bank had been finally liquidated. The first installment of 25 per cent. to the depositors will be paid before May 15 by Receiver Charles A. Hanna, now in charge of the bank. This surprising upward turn in the fortunes of Mr. Morse was brought to the attention of the former "Ice King" by an Evening World reporter, who saw him at the office of his counsel, Gifford, Hobbs & Beard, No. 5 Nassau street.

Change of View, Says Morse.

"One million dollars for the stockholders," repeated Mr. Morse. "Why, there is over $2,500,000 for the stockholders at the very lowest calculation. Until yesterday Receiver Hanna marked my loans of $243,000 off the books as a liability, and now I see I am looked upon quite differently in that quarter." Mr. Morse was asked to give the details of his settlement in full with the National Bank of North America receiver, whereby more than $143,000 worth of Morse paper in the bank was cleaned up to the entire satisfaction of the Government's representative. "I would rather not," said Mr. Morse. "I am confident that coming events will vindicate me. You understand that more than $450,000 of the obligations which I took up at the National Bank of North America was not my paper, nor was it paper which I could have been held to pay. As an evidence of good faith to the public, upon advice of my counsel, I settled with Receiver Hanna for the so-called 'dummy' loans."

In full justice to Mr. Morse it should be understood that he was not legally obligated to pay the so-called 'dummy' loans of $450,000. This much was admitted by Receiver Hanna when he brought action against Morse. However, the little financier yesterday paid $40,000 in cash and signed over to the receiver $150,000 Stock Exchange securities, a settlement of fifty-cents-on-the-dollar, and suit brought against him for the so-called 'dummy' loans was discontinued.

Personal Notes Paid.

Mr. Morse's personal notes paid in the amount of $243,000 have been paid in full to all interests $100,000 in cash and $143,000 in securities, is secured by a new issue of notes running ninety days and fully secured. Charles M. Schwab, former President of the United States Steel Company, and personal friends and relatives of Morse in New England are credited with being the interests that have helped Mr. Morse. Mr. Morse is deeply concerned in reorganizing the National Bank of North America, which he firmly believes can be made a going institution. His chief counsel, James M. Gifford, has had considerable success since taking over the receiver's suits against the banks, and the Hamilton Bank and the Borough Bank of Brooklyn are two institutions which are being kept up through the advice and counsel of Morse, by making a full settlement with the National Bank of North America, also places himself in a much better position to meet the Federal indictment, his paying off the 'dummy' loans even putting him in the light of an upright man, rarely found these days below Fulton street.

Office Building an Asset.

One of the principal assets of the National Bank of North America is the office building No. 43 Exchange place, the ground floor of which was occupied by the bank. The building is said to have been carried on the books at $221,000, although a mortgage of $150,000 was against the property. The receiver values the equity of the bank in the building at $70,000, and it is not believed that he will need sell it to meet the full claims of depositors. He won't sell it, said Mr. Morse to-day with a broad grin, which, by the way is the first he has seen since his return from Europe. He told you he will need sell the building. And there are other properties of the bank he won't sell, either. Mr. Morse has claimed himself in the fight to save off bankruptcy that the bank was not a going concern, and the subsequent activity of certain part of a gigantic conspiracy conducted by other financial giants who were in trouble for their own past misdeeds before the public and who thought to kick up a lot of dust and escape in the smoke from the consequences of their own wrongdoing. But Mr. Morse would not discuss the October panic for publication when the opportunity was again afforded to him.
